JPP was created by the community, for the community, and cannot do this work alone. JPP has grown to include over 60 community partners including government, schools, early childhood, faith groups, nonprofits, local foundations, community mental health, fatherhood, community members, volunteers, and many more! Together, we work to help families break the cycle of generational poverty, aiding them in their journey to self-defined prosperity.

Each family is connected to JPP until their youngest child graduates from high school, ensuring academic accomplishment and sustained family self-sufficiency. JPP works with the whole family, using the multi-generation approach, working with both children and their families or caretakers. Families identify both family and individual goals. JPP coaches work with families who have opted in because they want something new in their life and are committed to their child graduating and achieving their dreams.
